

The "BioRe" Training Center for Organic and Biodynamic Agriculture—a holistic approach to the process of enriching and empowering organic farmers of India

Baruah, R.¹

Abstract

Mahatma Gandhi said "Nature provides for our need and not for our greed." In this land of the "Mahatma," organic agriculture goes a long way toward being not just a form of agricultural practices but a way of life. The land is referred to as "mother earth" and to look after the mother is the spiritual duty of every child.

To realize this dream, the bioRe association adopts the following approach:

"bioRe training center for organic agriculture" provides a platform for education and training of the mind and also equal partnership with men and women farmers, a place where the farmers can freely voice their opinions and where we are formulating a scientific basis for highlighting the benefits of organic agriculture through a well-planned research project.

The bioRe Association was established to empower organic and biodynamic farmers and communities by facilitating education and infrastructure, by addressing local needs, and thus leading to holistic and sustainable development. As a unique model in the field of organic agriculture, progressively taking the movement forward not only as being economically beneficial but also as being socially responsible is like "being present in the body but penetrating into the soul as well."

¹ BioRe Association, 14, Signals Vihar Mhow Madhya Pradesh India, e-mail: ritu.baruah@gmail.com, Internet: www.bioreindia.com